Talks of Vague Rumors About the Dead Garfield.

THAT BITTER RIVALRY.

GARFIELD INCAPABLE OF SUCH AN INTRIGUE.

An Interview That Half Denies the Stories Told of Garfield By Senator Sherman-His Fatal Defect Was an Uniformity of Purpose Which Made Him as Clay in the Hands of the Potter

CHICAGO, Nov. 28.-John J. Ingalis, of Kansas, has added a chapter to the history of Garfield's nomination, a history that Senator Sherman's book is drawing from the lips of American statesmen and politicians. When asked if he had any personal recollections of incidents connected with the Garfield episode Mr.

"I happened to be in Washington on business when Garfield died in September, 1881, and was one of the Senators named to attend the remains to Cleveland. Mr. Sherman was also a member of the committee and the train had hardly left the city limits before we fell into conversation about the dead president, his character and his career. Mr. Sherman apoke with intense fee ng and the impression left on my minu was that he believed that he had been betrayed by the men chosen to advocata his (Sherman's) nomination.

pression left on my mind was that he believed that he had been betrayed by the men chosen to advocate his (Sherman's) monimation.

"Have you any personal knowledge of anything that would tend to show Garfield's attitude prior to his nomination?"

"For weeks before the convention of 1880 there were vague, mysterious, entangling rumors and whispers of Garfield in he air around the capitol at Washington, I was sitting one day in May in the Senate restaurant with a Senator now prominently mentioned as a candidate for the presidency. We were talking about the contest then approaching and agreed that considering the bitter rivalry among the aspirants, the nomination of Garfield appeared to be a not improbable outcome. Just at that moment, by a singular coincidence Garfield entered the room. We called him to our table and he joined in our repast. We mentioned the proverb about the devit and his horns, told him what we had been talking about and locosely tendered him our congratulations and best wishes for his success. He made an embarrassed attempt at repartee and turning the conversation, but his tone and manner left no doubt in my mind that the subject was neither novel nor repulsive to him. He was then a Representative in Congress, United States Senator-elect, and a delegate to the national convention, an extraordinary accumulation of honors, unique its political history. He was justified in regarding himself as a favorite of fortune and child of destiny. As I recall that conversation it seems like the incredible climax of romance that winni less than olighteen months he was nominated for the presidency, elected, assassinated and enhombed." "I was in college with Garfield," said Mr. Ingalls, "though not in the same class, and our relations were cordial and friendly until his death. He was incapable of intrigue, treason or stratagem, but his temperament was emotional and ardent, and his sensibility was excessive. It may not in the hands of the potter and disqualified him for administrative or executive functions."

WASHINGTON.—Eleven of the twenty-two representatives of the south, exclusive of Missouri, met in caucus touight to determine on their action respecting their choice for the officers of that body. Some dissatisfaction has been expressed by them at the slate already made up, which lesves the south without any representation in the elective offices of the house. After considerable discussion it was resolved by the caucus to stand by General Henderson, of Illinois, for the position of sergeant-at-arms. The members of the caucus are rather chary about talking of the results of the meeting. Senator Pritchard, of North Carolina, and Hon. Clay Evans were present for a short time.

ALFALFA CULTURE.

The following summary of facts and suggestions touching on the salient features of alfalfa culture are taken from No. 31 of the Farmers' Bulletins Coffees and issued by the Department of Agriculture at Washington:

Alfalfa seed weighs 60 pounds to the bushel.

Alfaifa does not attain maturity until the third or fourth year; therefore, do not sow it expecting to get the best results in less than that time.

Alfaifa grows best on a deep, sandy loam, underlaid by a loose and permeable subsoil. It will not grow if there is an excess of water in the soil. The land must be well drained.

Alfaifa is a deep feeder. Plow the land thoroughly; the deeper the better.

Alfaifa thrives beat in soils containing lime, potash and magnesium. It does not grow well in soils containing ing lime, potash and magnesium. It does not grow well in solis containing an excess of iron, or where lime is wholly absent.

Cut for hay when the first flowers appear. If cut in full bloom, the hay will be woody and less nutritious.

Cut for seed when the middle clusters of seed pods are dark brown.

To make aifalfa hay, cut in the forenoon and let it wilt; then rake throwindrows, It should be cured in windrows and cocks, and stacked or put in barns with as little handling as possible. Great care is required in in barns with as little handling as possible. Great care is required in order to get it in stack before the leaves become too dry and brittle. The leaves are the most palatable and nutritious part of the hay.

In the arid regions, where irrigation is practiced, put water on the field before sowing the seed, and immediately after cutting each crop of hay.

It is not safe to pasture either cattle or sheep on alfalfa, as they are liable to bloat when it is fed green. Feed them the hay, or practice soiling, growing hoes than to pasture them on alfalfa. One acre will furnish pasturage for from ten to twenty hogs per season.

Horses can be pastured on alfalfa. There is no better hay for work animals, or for young, growing stock.

Alfalfa hay is not a complete ration. The best results are obtained by feeding it with corn fodder, ensilage, wheat or out straw, or roots. Alfalfa contains large amounts of protein, which goes to form blood, bone and muscle. It is deficient in the carbohydrates, namely: starch, fats, cellulose and fiber. These must be added to the ration or a part of the protein will be and fiber. These must be added to the ration or a part of the protein will be ration or a part of the protein will be wasted.

To rid a field of alfalfa plow in midsummer. This will rot the roots, and after the water has been drained off, the field can be plowed.

Do not cut alfalfa too late in the season.

Do not let water stand on a field season.

Do not let water stand on a field more than forty-eight hours.

Alfalfa hay, properly cured, has about the same value as red clover hay. The yield is much greater. It can be cut from three or four to seven or eight times in a season and yields from a ton to a ton and a half or more at a cutting.

Six to ten bushels of seed is the usual yield per aere.

Keep the weeds mowed and rake off the first season, or they will choke out the young alfalfa.

Sow alone without any nurse crop. The latter is often just as harmful as the young alfaifa.

Sow alone without any nurse crop. The latter is often just as harmful as the weeds.

Screen alfalfa seed before sowing, to separate the dodder and other weed seeds. Dodder or love vine is the worst enemy of alfalfa. Prevention is better than cure.

BY-PRODUCTS OF SORGHUM. The by-products of sorghum may all be utilized. The seed contains the same properties as any other grain. If the weather is dry it may be cured in the field and threshed with a machine, but if showery it will be necessary to shed it to have nice bright seed; twenty to thirty bushels per acre is a common

HOW TO FEED. All good feeders recognize the necessity of a liberal diet in the feeding of all kinds of stock if the work is to be made profitable. Every growing animal requires a certain quantity of food to simply keep it alive, and it would be possible to so regulate the feeding of an animal that it should neither gain nor lose in weight for a long period. During that time the very considerable quantity of food which it would have consumed would be, from an economical beef-production point of view, entirely wasted; and it does not require much consideration to understand that it is only when food in excess of the quantity required for bare subsistence is given that a profitable return can be ob-All good feeders recognize the necesthat a profitable return can be ob-tained. From this it may be said without fear of contradiction, that true economy in feeding lies in the shortening of fattening operation.
